

punish and pointing how under the auspices of Christianity that terrible type of punishing occurred that took place under the inquisition and then showed how some people's urge to punish comes from bad experiences they had as children and it is reflected in their desire to punish children. Because of the Eighth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, Senator Hohenstein, I doubt that some would give in to maybe some of their more bloodthirsty inclinations by trying to get it enacted into legislation. But I'm not comparing this to the disemboweling. I used that and the others as examples of what religion leads people to do; the cruelty, the infliction of pain and punishment, the desire to compel a person to obey a certain thing by either threatening or inflicting harsh punishments. There is where the analogy applies to this bill. Because you can't make these young people not drink, you want to inflict punishments upon them that become increasingly severe until the point is reached where maybe they cannot legally drive a car under any circumstances and you all want that. Senator Hohenstein hasn't been here to participate in some of the other attempts to mitigate earlier attempts by some of us, well, when a bill would be passed saying that your license is suspended, you can't drive, period, we would try to mitigate that by allowing a person to drive to and from work. Under this, the person could not drive to and from work and, remember, you've got young people that you're talking about. So you're taking their privilege of driving from them and if they drive, they go to jail. This amendment, however, doesn't talk directly about what I have just discussed. I was trying to give some perspective on earlier comments. What this amendment would do is what it says. It would be unlawful for any person under the age of 21 to consume liquor in this state.
